The Recent Election: New Wave of Politics by Mariah Marks

The 2024 presidential election has set the stage for unprecedented debates and controversies, driven by the candidacy and subsequent election of Donald Trump, whose criminal record includes 34 felony convictions. In an era where social media serves as a megaphone for public discourse, the election has sparked intense online debates about the future of America, its global representation, and the impact of constitutional norms—or lack thereof—on presidential eligibility.

Social Media: A Platform for Polarization

Since the election concluded on November 6, 2024, social media platforms have been inundated with contrasting perspectives on President-elect Trump's legal status and its implications. Public figures such as Cardi B have weighed in, amplifying the conversation and fueling the digital battleground where opposing views clash. Politico highlighted the unprecedented nature of the situation, noting, "For the first time in history, a presumptive presidential nominee from one of the two major U.S. political parties is a convicted felon."

While some users express outrage over Trump's ability to run for and win the presidency despite his criminal record, others defend his right to lead, emphasizing that his legal troubles should not overshadow his capacity to govern. This divide mirrors broader societal tensions, with Democrats questioning the fairness of his candidacy and Republicans pushing back against what they perceive as biased portrayals.

The Recent Election: New Wave of Politics

Legal Loopholes and Constitutional Questions

The debate centers around a glaring constitutional ambiguity: the U.S. Constitution does not bar individuals with felony convictions from running for president. The only eligibility requirements are being at least 35 years old, a natural-born citizen, and having resided in the United States for at least 14 years. This has led to widespread confusion, with many questioning how a convicted felon can be legally unable to vote in some states but still eligible to hold the highest office in the land.

The only way to change this would be through a constitutional amendment. However, as the White House website explains, passing an amendment requires a two-thirds majority in both houses of Congress or a constitutional convention called by two-thirds of the states. The amendment must then be ratified by three-fourths of state legislatures or state conventions. Given the current political landscape—with 30 states voting Republican and 20 Democrat in the 2024 election—achieving the necessary 38-state majority seems implausible.

An alternative route would involve passing legislation to prohibit felons from running for president. However, such a bill would face significant hurdles. A Republican-majority Congress is unlikely to bring it to the floor, and even if it did pass, it would almost certainly be vetoed by President Trump. Overriding a presidential veto would require a two-thirds majority in both the House and Senate, an outcome that appears highly unlikely in today's polarized political environment.

Implications for Governance and Foreign Policy

The controversy surrounding President-elect Trump extends beyond domestic politics to the international stage. As a convicted felon, Trump could face travel restrictions that limit his ability to engage with key allies and global powers. Countries such as Canada, Australia, and China may deny him entry outright, while others could impose restrictions if his criminal status is disclosed.

These limitations could complicate crucial foreign policy efforts at a time when global tensions are high. Effective diplomacy requires unrestricted leadership, and Trump's legal challenges could undermine the United States' ability to maintain its status as a leading world power.

A Defining Moment in American History

The election of a convicted felon as president marks a unique moment in American history. It raises profound questions about the balance between legal accountability and democratic choice, the role of social media in shaping public opinion, and the adaptability of constitutional frameworks to unprecedented challenges.

Only time will reveal the full impact of these developments on the United States and its position in the world. As debates continue to unfold online and in political arenas, one thing remains clear: the 2024 election has ushered in a new era of complexity and contention in American politics.

KFHS Football Playoffs, From Zero to 35 in One Half: KFHS 35 - Nansemond River 14

The cold winds and wet turf set the stage for a fierce playoff battle between Suffolk rivals King's Fork and Nansemond River on Friday night. In front of a roaring crowd of over 1,000 fans, the two teams squared off in a defensive stalemate that encapsulated the intensity of their rivalry.

First Quarter: Defensive Dominance

The game began with King's Fork kicking off to Nansemond River, who took possession at their own 40-yard line. Nansemond River's offense struggled to gain momentum against King's Fork's tenacious defense, led by #11 Joshua Pittman's early sack, which pushed the Warriors back to their own 28-yard line. A punt by Nansemond River gave the Bulldogs favorable field position at their own 37-yard line.

However, penalties plagued King's Fork, stalling their drive despite capitalizing on a key pass interference call. The Bulldogs found themselves facing a false start and eventually turned the ball over on downs at Nansemond River's 17-yard line.

Nansemond River attempted to seize the momentum, with #8 Taivon "Philly" Douglas connecting on a long pass to #5 Calvin Holloway, followed by a strong run from #4 Melvin Brown. Despite their efforts, the Warriors couldn't sustain the drive, punting the ball back to King's Fork as the first quarter ended scoreless.

Second Quarter: Opportunities Missed

Nansemond River's defense continued to stand tall, pinning King's Fork deep in their own territory early in the second quarter. After a crucial timeout by Nansemond River, the Bulldogs punted, giving the Warriors excellent field position at King's Fork's 22-yard line. Douglas once again showcased his arm with a deep pass to #16 Christian Jordan, setting up the Warriors at the 5-yard line. However, the Bulldogs' defense held firm, forcing a turnover on downs.

King's Fork looked to capitalize on the defensive stand with a steady drive led by #0 Nyshaun Lewis, who broke loose for a long run. The Bulldogs managed to march to Nansemond River's 45-yard line but ran out of time before halftime, leaving the score knotted at 0-0.

KFHS Football Playoffs, From Zero to 35 in One Half: KFHS 35 - Nansemond River 14

In a game that began as a tense standoff, King's Fork emerged victorious with a powerful second-half performance, defeating Nansemond River 35-14. The Bulldogs combined offensive precision with defensive tenacity, breaking open the game after halftime.

Third Quarter: Bulldogs Take Command

The third quarter saw King's Fork make a decisive statement, sparked by Nyshaun Lewis. Early in the quarter, Lewis ignited the scoring with a dazzling 34-yard rushing touchdown, breaking the stalemate and giving the Bulldogs a 7-0 advantage after a successful PAT. Lewis' explosive running energized the team, setting the tone for what was to come.

Quarterback Myles Satchell then showcased his arm with a perfectly placed 35-yard touchdown pass to Zachary Walton, extending the Bulldogs' lead to 14-0.

Nansemond River responded with a big play of their own, as Taivon "Philly" Douglas delivered a 30-yard rushing touchdown. However, a missed PAT left them trailing 14-6.

Fourth Quarter: King's Fork Pulls Away

King's Fork wasted no time in the fourth quarter, with Satchell connecting with Ziyon Green on a 32-yard touchdown pass, pushing the lead to 21-6. The Bulldogs' defense then made a pivotal impact when Lewis intercepted a pass and returned it for a touchdown, further extending the lead to 28-6.

Douglas continued to battle for Nansemond River, scoring his second rushing touchdown of the night—this time from 11 yards out—and completing a two-point conversion to narrow the gap to 28-14.

But King's Fork would not be denied. Satchell found Green for another touchdown, sealing the game with a 35-14 scoreline. A late forced fumble by the Bulldogs' defense extinguished any hopes of a Nansemond River comeback.

Tea Time: A Horror Story

She scrolled through the profile, finding a picture of Nia and her family sitting on the porch steps of a nice house. It was almost too easy. It only took Tonya a few minutes to take a quick peek at the photo's metadata-a skill she picked up completely innocently, of course. And then, she had an address.

Tonya drummed her fingertips on the desk. The house would be empty until pretty late in the afternoon-her boyfriend was leaving for a trip and the journalism club at Malik's school was staying late. Good, the boys were too occupied to go looking for her.

She reached into her purse, grabbing her car keys.

Malik was responsible for that month's headliner in the Queen's Spoon News. He was sitting next to the window in the classroom that housed the journalism club, listening to the other club member's discuss their work as he typed quickly.

He was about to go ask about that month's advice column when his phone buzzed. He picked it up, seeing a new message from his stepdad.

Can you check on your mom? It read.

Malik felt a sense of uneasiness creep through his body. He couldn't help but remember what had happened that morning. He quickly typed a reply back, before walking out of the room to call Tonya. He listened to the phone ring for what felt like a lifetime before it went to voicemail.

Malik tried his best not to panic. His mom was probably just busy. She'd call right back...right? Right. He let out a sigh of relief, picking up the call from his mom.

"Hi mom," He said. "Thom-"

"I'm picking you up from your meeting early," She said.

"Huh?" Malik asked. "Why?"

"I'll tell you in the car," She said. "Get your stuff,"

Tea Time: A Horror Story

"Um...okay," He said. "See you,"

"See you," Tonya said. "Love you,"

Malik walked back into the club room, packing his things. He quickly told the vice-president of the club he had to leave early and he walked to the front of the building, fears rising. He stepped outside, seeing an unfamiliar red car. The window rolled down, and he heard his mother's voice before he saw her.

"Get in," She called to him.

Malik hesitated for a second before getting into the passenger seat.

"What happened to our car?" He asked.

"Nothing," Tonya said, without making any indication that she was going to drive.

Malik squirmed in his seat.

"Malik," Tonya started. "I need you to help me do something,"

"Okay," He said. "What is it?"

"You remember the submission you showed me?" Tonya said.

Malik nodded.

"I need your help" Tonya paused. "Handling the situation,"

"Mom..." Malik said. "What did you do?" he whispered.

"I told you," She said, putting a hand on his cheek. "I took care of it. I just need your help... cleaning things up,"

Malik felt his throat run dry. There was no way his mother had done what he thought she did.

"Mom--"

"You're going to help me, right?" She asked him. "Together forever,"

She took his hand, and he looked down at their matching rings.

"Together forever," He said.

She nodded, letting go of his hand.

"Good," She said. "Great,"

Tea Time: A Horror Story

She finally put her hands on the steering wheel, driving out of the parking lot. She turned the music up, and a bouncy afrobeats song was playing. Malik crossed his arms, feeling his world close in on him.

The car ride lasted forever to Malik, and his thoughts spiraled accordingly. After a while, the car pulled in front of a large, fancy home. Tonya grabbed her purse, pulling out a pair of gloves and handing them to Malik.

“Go ahead, put them on,” She said “Quick,”

She took out another pair of gloves, putting them on herself before getting out of the car.

Malik reluctantly put the gloves on.

“Come on,” She said to him.

Malik followed her into the house, wanting to turn and run away more and more with each step. He glanced around the room he’d just entered, seeing photos of what looked like a happy family on the walls. He followed Tonya down the hall, and they turned into a living room. Malik stopped himself from screaming, faced with the corpse of a dead man sitting on the couch.

“Mom,” He whispered. “Mom, there’s no way-”

“Malik,” Tonya said seriously. “Stay calm. The hardest part is done. Go find a blanket big enough to wrap him in,”

Malik could barely stay standing, faced with a disgusting scene. He only hesitated for another moment before going upstairs to where he presumed the bedrooms were. He peeked into rooms, seeing the bedrooms of what he assumed were young children and kept moving. Finally, he reached the master bedroom.

Tea Time: A Horror Story

He entered the room quickly, wanting his nightmare to be over as soon as possible. He ripped the comforter from the bed, ignoring the empty beer bottles scattered on the floor, grime painting the corners. He returned downstairs with the blanket, to see that Tonya had moved the coffee table, making more room on the floor.

"Help me wrap him up," Tonya said. "Put the blanket down first,"

Malik nodded, expression blank, before moving to haul the body off of the couch. For a moment, he got sad at the thought of his favorite hoodie being ruined with bloodstains before being shocked at his own selfishness. He could admit that the world didn't need another abusive man. Nonetheless, he still found himself nauseous at what his mother had done, eyeing the brain matter visible in the man's cracked-open skull.

He was clumsy carrying the body and dropped it on the blanket with a thud.

Tonya shot him a critical glare.

"Sorry," He said, before moving the blanket over the man.

"Stop, stop," Tonya said. "I'll get it, just...go find some duct tape or something,"

"Okay," He said, walking into the kitchen to be caught off guard at how messy it was.

Trash toppled out from the overfilled trash bin, which matched the sink, kicking the garbage out of his way. He started opening unorganized drawers until he found one filled with random objects, including tape. He pulled the tape from the drawer, heading back into the living room.

"Don't just stand there," Tonya said.

Malik moved towards the body.

"Hand it here," She said. "You turn it over when I say, and I'll tape,"

Tea Time: A Horror Story

"Alright," He said.

Taping the body was a blur. Before he knew it, he was being sent upstairs to get more things to wrap up the blood-soaked blanket. Malik and Tonya made quick work of wrapping up the body, before hauling it into the back seat of the car.

Malik returned to the passenger seat of the car, the thoughts in his head reduced to mush.

Tonya started the car again, driving down the road like it was any other day.

"Oh, I forgot," She asked. "Are you hungry?"

Malik shook his head.

"Okay," Tonya said "We can pick up some food when we go home,"

Malik nodded.

"I'm really sorry I pulled you into this," Tonya said. "There's only one more thing I have to do, then we'll be home,"

Malik shut his eyes, waiting for the whole ordeal to be over with. They drove for a long time, and Malik drifted off, eventually falling asleep.

The next thing he felt was being shaken awake.

"Malik," Tonya said gently. "Malik,"

He nodded awake, assuming the events of the last few hours were just a bad dream until he noticed his mom's gloved hands and the unfamiliar car. The inside of the car was so dark, he could barely believe that they'd been out so long.

"I'm up," He said.

“Good,” She said. “Go stand over there,”

She gestured outside of the car, making Malik look at their surroundings. The car was parked near a large lake. It was so wide, so dark crystal blue, it looked like an ocean.

Malik opened the car door, stepping out in a daze.

“I’ll be right back,” Tonya said, and Malik didn’t have time to register what she said as strange. He walked away from the car, towards some craggy trees surrounding the lake. Just as he was going to sit, he watched as the car drove right into the lake, and he ran towards it as it sunk into the abyss.

He fell to the ground, his knees going weak. Tears ran down his face. He screamed into the woods, crying and hollering until his voice went hoarse.

He wiped his tears, silence filling the air for a moment and he noticed something moving in the water. Tonya swam to the surface, and Malik grabbed her desperately, pulling her onto land.

To Be Continued.

Tea Time: A Horror Story

For the second year in a row, the King's Fork Drama Club hosted its annual haunted auditorium, with this year's theme being "Dead Man's Circus." Rumor has it that the auditorium might actually be haunted with this also being the second year with unexpected interruptions. Nevertheless, the actors put on an amazing show, with screams being heard from the choir room to the cafeteria.

The actors had been working on the show since September. Initially, there were two ideas for the theme: Slaughterhouse and Circus. A vote among the actors had circus emerge as the theme for the 2024 haunted auditorium.

Acts featured in the show included a ringmaster, a contortionist, frightful twins, and a game of 'Ring Around the Rosie' with a "dead" man in the center. The club managed to earn back what they spent on the show and raise plenty, making the haunted auditorium a success once again.

The attraction proved to be popular once again, with ticket lines extending past every lunch period. Many hope that the haunted auditorium will remain an annual tradition at King's Fork. With this being Mrs. Millette-Miller's second year at the school, she continues to impress and surprise both students and faculty. With the fake blood and real sweat and tears that went into putting on such a performance, it's fair to say that it was worth it all.
